

THE HOPE MODEL

HOPE IS NOT A FEELING.

Goals, pathways and agency.

01

Hope needs three things.

A goal worth reaching.
More than one route to it.
Enough agency to make a move.

JENNIFER'S POINT

Remove one and hope becomes fragile.

Start small enough to move.

When work feels impossible, the annual milestone is too far away. Use a goal close enough to finish today. Then make the progress visible.

TRY THIS

One completed hour can restart momentum.

Plan A is not a strategy.

Life is circuitous. Hope grows when people can see more than one credible route forward.

BUILD OPTIONS

Write plan B, C and D before the route closes.

People need room to move.

A goal and four paths still fail if every decision belongs to somebody else.

JENNIFER'S POINT

Agency turns a route into action.

Layoffs hit the people who stay.

When people expect the next cut, risk-taking drops. New ideas stop. Energy moves from contribution to self-protection.

KEEP CAPABILITY

Reskilling can preserve hope and useful talent.

Compliance cannot create hope.

Micromanagement removes accomplishment and intrinsic motivation. It also raises the manager's own stress.

TRY THIS

Agree the outcome. Give people room.

DO

Make hope operational.

- 01 Pick one goal small enough to finish.
- 02 Write three viable paths.
- 03 Give someone a decision they own.

BETTER MOMENTS 05

Jennifer Moss. The full conversation lands Thursday.